Farmer's Annual Loss From Weeds is $179,200,000

Special Study of Weed Control
Financed by Elevator Owners
— Pamphlets available at elevators.

Professors of Agricultural College of the University of Manitoba specializing in weed control and eradication have made compilations indicating that loss to Western Canadian farmers through weeds amounts to $179,200,000 annually.

In order to provide farmers with information as to the best means of combating the weed menace, Dr. G. P. McIntosh, Professor of Agronomy and W. Tisdley, assistant on weed research, approached the Northwest Grain Dealers' Association with a proposal that the fine elevator companies finance scientific investigation concerning weed eradication. Recognizing the need for such a study of the weed problem, the elevator men undertook to raise the funds necessary for the survey. This work has now been proceeding for the past three years and the results of investigations of Professors been turned over to the Northwest Grain Dealers.

The studies relate to Couch Grass, Sow Thistle, Canada Thistle, control of weeds by chemicals and destruction of weed seeds by sunning. The first of the pamphlets dealing with these subjects is now in the hands of all fine country elevator agents for free distribution. Farmers for the future may now obtain the latest scientific information on this important subject at any local fine elevator.

The quality of Canada's grain crop and profitable volume of production can only be obtained through control of weeds. Line elevator company owners are deserving of appreciation of the farming population in recognizing the need for scientific study of this problem and the making available of the results of these experiments to the farmers of the West.

SYNOPSIS

Camilla Hoyt and Peter Anson, young and in love, marry secretly, deciding to live their own lives apart until Peter is able to provide for her. Peter is a young, struggling sculptor trying to win a competition for scholarship abroad and Camilla is the adopted daughter of a wealthy family. She is not to inherit money when she comes of age and so is studying commercial art in the hope of landing an agency job. Others in the story are Avis Werth, another wealthy girl who is trying to win Peter, Sylvia Todd, Peter's model, and Gus Matson, his former roommate with whom he has quarrelled. At a party at an exclusive club Peter entertains Camilla's guests with impersonations. When the rest of the members of the party go to a cabaret to continue the party, Peter and Camilla slip off to the beach by themselves and fall asleep on the sand. When they awake it is early morning and Avis and another boy are standing near them. This makes it necessary for Camilla to announce before the party that she and Peter are married. Bowman and Weeks, an advertising agency, where Camilla has submitted some of her work, send for her and tell her they have a new account which requires unusual treatment of juvenile art. The critics were enthusiastic about her work, and Mr. Weeks offers her a salary of $50.00 a week to start and a prospect of having it doubled. She tells Peter of her good fortune in securing employment. Mrs. Hoyt is also informed that Camilla has obtained work and is going to leave the Hoyt household. Avis Werth rents a studio on the same floor as Peter, and invites him to have lunch there. He accepts reluctantly, but is favorably impressed with his visit.

(Now Go On With The Story)

CHAPTER XXXVII

"All that has nothing to do with your problem, Peter," Camilla said, ending the subject abruptly. "Right now, what you need isn't more work, but more time and freedom from anxiety. I can take care of myself now, and I am going to do it until you get established in your own work."

Peter rose hastily to his feet, almost upsetting Camilla with his sudden movement.

"Not much, you're not!" he snorted with anger and disgust. His voice sounded cold, so that it chilled Camilla to the bone, at the same time his eyes blazed fire. She never would have believed that Peter—her gentle, adoring, amiable Peter—could be so angry with her. And over nothing at all. She was experiencing what every woman does sooner or later after marriage—the revelation of some fault or ignoble characteristic in the man she loves, and which she had not dreamed he possessed.

Her surprise at his reaction silenced her for a few moments. Peter stood and gazed silently out the window. Finally, she ventured, "But, Peter, won't you be reasonable? Is there any sense in your doing odd work to pay your expenses when you are so rushed for time on your important work, when I can just as well help you?"

He waited around to face her and demanded slowly, "Was that in our contract, 'Was that in our contract?' You ought to know—you drew it up!"

She attempted to laugh, as if this first quarrel must be a joke and they were only acting. "Oh, there were no many clauses in that silly contract that it would take a lawyer to remember them."

"Now you think it was a silly contract do you? Well, get this! When I agree to do a thing, I do it. I'm not quitters! I suppose you are even sorer you married me, now. I don't blame you, and you can break the whole contract any time you want to."

Like all quarrels, every word aggravated another unreasonable. In Peter's overwrought state of mind, his chagrin at his poverty, and his unrecognized jealousy of Camilla, his reasoning was paralyzed.

Camilla gasped helplessly. "Why, Peter! Please, don't talk like that. You must be ill. You are ill—you are tired and worrying too much. You have to let me help you."

"Don't say that again!" he commanded angrily. "That shows what you think I am—a weakling. Just because you got started ahead of me, you're laughing at me—or feeling sorry for me, and that's all the same. If you think I like it that people will be so telling me how proud I should be of my wife, you're dead wrong. There's nothing in the world I despise and dread more than living in the income of a wife who is more successful than her husband. I won't do that, even if I never do any better than I am now."

He had to stop for breath. But even that pause did not anger Camilla. It only hurt her cruelly, caused little shivers of pain to tremble through her, radiating from her heart, where a great heavy hurt throbbed and ached.

"But you are doing splendidly, dear Peter. It is just that your work takes more time to develop. You really are doing so much more than I am, and it will be worth much more in the end, too. That you can't starve while you wait for the result!"

"I won't starve. I never have. And don't offer me your charity!"

"Why, Peter," she pleaded, "I was not offering you anything. What I have, is yours. And if anything I have can help with your future, I am doing it just as much for myself as for you, don't you see? Can't I invest my money in your future?"

"No, I don't see it that way and never will. You refused to let me take care of you, and now you expect me to depend on you."

"But that's different. If you had to take care of me, it would hurt me. I can help you because of my work."

"Which is exactly the whole thing. You don't need to remind me of it!" Camilla sighed helplessly. Words were useless in Peter's present mood. She never had seen him like that and didn't know what to say or do. Presently, she got up from her chair swiftly and went over to put her arms around him and let against his like a hurt, bewildered child.

"All right, darling. Let's not talk about it any more. I'm sorry—I suggested anything. I want you to do whatever makes you happy!"

"Happy?" he scoffed. She drew back and looked up into his face quickly. His eyes wavered and turned sadly away from meeting hers, stubbornly. In her arms, she felt his big body rigid, unyielding, and he seemed to draw away from her. Camilla's thoughts floundered desperately, but she could think of nothing to say. She just dropped her head on his broad, linen-covered breast and tightened her arms around him. His arms hung listlessly at his sides, as if he were powerless to move them.

Finally, she said softly, without looking up at him, "Peter, don't you love me?"

He moved impatiently and drew away from her. "Of course, You know I do. That only makes it worse!"

It was as if he had plunged a knife into her breast before, and now he gave it a quick twist to increase her pain.

"Makes what worse?" she asked wearily.

"Why, if I didn't love you and had no pride—that is, if I hadn't the two greatest things in life—I would think it was pretty soft to have a woman who could make me laugh for both of us, as some fellows do."

"I think you are making a mountain out of a sand pile," her own resentment began to rise, "but I have told you I would say no more about it. Forget it, and let's go out for dinner somewhere?"

"Wait with? I can't buy dinner for two with fifty cents. I get paid tomorrow, but that doesn't help me today. Besides, I owe most of what is coming to me."

She would have said, blithely, had they not just quarrelled over that very thing. "Well, come along. I have money," but she dared not venture that suggestion now. Or she might have proposed that they go back to her apartment and have dinner. There was plenty of food in the little useless refrigerator. But that would be like pouring hot oil on his wounds of false pride.

But was it false pride, she asked herself anxiously, and had to admit that it was not, to a certain extent. She was proud of Peter—had that possessed such pride, even if he did exaggerate its maintenance under these particular circumstances.

Has Metal Larynx

Clarence Peterson of Ephraim, Utah, has regained his power of speech through an ingenious metal box equipped with a vibrating reed. Telephone engineers designed the apparatus and surgeons placed it in Peterson's throat. He was again able to speak and to whistle after being speechless for a year as the result of a growth in his upper trachea which forced removal of the larynx.

Little Hints For This Week

"Thou shalt be steadfast and shall not fear, because thou shalt forget thy misdeeds, and remember it as waters that flow away." Job 1:15-16.

In the bitter waves of woe, Beaten and tossed about, By the sudden winds that blow From the desolate shores of doubt, Where the anchors that faith has Dragging in the gale, To the things that cannot fail, —Washington Gladden.

In the darkest hour through which a human soul can pass, whatever else is doubtful, this at least is certain. If there be no God and no future state, even then it is better to be generous than selfish, better to be true than false, better to be brave than to be a coward. Blessed beyond all earthly blessings is the man, who in the tempestuous darkness of his soul has dared to hold fast to these venerable landmarks. Thrice blessed is he, who when all is cheerless within and without, has obstinately clung to moral good. Thrice blessed because his night shall pass into clear bright day. —F. W. Robertson.

New Regulations For Receiving Gold Bullion

Origin Must Be Readily Recognized At Royal Mint

An effort to further discourage the melting down of gold coins which are legal tender in Canada is made by the minister of finance in the new regulations for the receipt of gold bullion at the royal mint, Ottawa.

In future old jewelry and dental scrap will not be purchased if it has been melted or otherwise treated in such a way as to prevent its origin being readily recognized. It is unnecessary to melt down gold coins which are legal tender in Canada and this regulation will make it impossible for anyone to benefit by breaking the law since the gold cannot be legally exported.

Strict Regulations Of Chief Constable Of Northampton, England

Jazz and dance music must not be played in Northampton houses on Sundays. This pious prohibition was made by the Chief Constable of Northampton in England.
